Why dealer service isn't always the pricier option

There's a widespread assumption that the dealer is automatically more expensive than the corner shop. It often isn't — and here's the honest reason why.

Service coupons. Ask about current service coupons on common jobs like oil changes and brakes. Before you book, it's worth a look: see current service coupons.

The multipoint inspection is included. Every visit includes a complimentary multipoint inspection — brakes, fluids, belts, tires, battery, and more — performed by technicians trained specifically on your [Toyota/Kia]. At a quick-lube, that same inspection is often an add-on, or simply not offered. You're getting a documented health check as part of the price, not on top of it.

Factory-correct parts and trained techs. The work is done with the right parts and the right specs the first time, which is what actually keeps the long-term cost of ownership down.

How we present additional recommendations — on your phone, not at the counter

This is where service shops lose people's trust, and it's where we've deliberately changed the process.

When a technician finds something during your inspection, you don't get a surprise verbal pitch at the register. You get a digital multipoint inspection with photos and video sent straight to your phone. You can see the worn brake pad or the leaking hose for yourself, read the recommendation, and approve or decline each item right from your phone — no pressure, no standing at a counter making a snap decision.

Anything urgent for safety, we'll flag clearly. Anything that can wait, we'll tell you it can wait. If we find something beyond your original ticket, ask us to show you and put it in writing before approving. You stay in control of every dollar.

Tires and current offers

Tires are where people most often assume the dealer can't compete. We carry major brands, and our advice is simple: ask about current service coupons and tire offers before you decide. You also get installation by techs who know your vehicle and a courtesy inspection while it's on the lift. Ask your advisor for current tire pricing and offers on your size.
